RAND study finds stellar results

6,655 students from diverse populations in grades 3–5 were studied along with a comparison group using MAP scores and pre-pandemic national MAP norms.¹

More than half of all Core5 students outperformed the comparison group's median on spring reading assessments.

Big strugglers → big benefits

54% of students who started two or more grade levels behind gained two or more grade levels in one year.²

Recovery and beyond

Core5 students achieved gains that went beyond national pre-pandemic norms.

4th- and 5th-grade students already above pre-pandemic national norms in the fall still made gains with Core5.

RAND's 3rd-grade comparison group had smaller gains than Core5 students—with some even declining from pre-pandemic norms.
